

The Source's Jaime King and Others on What's Left For States After Gobeille

On March 1, the Supreme Court decided Gobeille v. Liberty Mutual Insurance Co., holding that ERISA preempted a Vermont law's APCD reporting requirements for self-funded employee health plans (see our case brief here). This case has enormous implications for price transparency and cost containment strategies, especially at the state level. To lay out the issues and offer predictions as to Gobeille's consequences, Health Affairs Blog ran a four-part series on the case, including one by Source Executive Editor and favorite collaborator Erin C. Fuse Brown called The Consequences Of Gobeille v. Liberty Mutual For Health Care Cost Control. Enjoy!
